core collapse supernovae are among the most powerful explosions in the universe releasing about 10^{53} erg of energy on timescales of a few tens of seconds these explosion events are also responsible for the production and dissemination of most of the heavy elements making life as we know it possible yet exactly how they work is still unresolved one reason for this is the sheer complexity and cost of a self consistent multi physics and multi dimensional core collapse supernova simulation which is impractical and often impossible even on the largest supercomputers we have available today to advance our understanding we instead must often use simplified models teasing out the most important ingredients for successful explosions while helping us to interpret results from higher fidelity multi physics models in this paper we investigate the role of instabilities in the core collapse supernova environment we present here simulation and visualization results produced by our code genesis

a tremendous explosion in space has broken through the space fabric itself that has acted like a flash flood engulfing everything in its powerful wake linking into the current ongoing changes within the earth it s atmosphere and the very pulse cycle of the planet bringing forth unseen forces which has sent out an interstellar communication containing an underlined code within it that can unlock the secrets to life itself on earth and amongst the universe setting in motion an eerie apocalyptic battle between good and evil forces here and beyond this strange force has awakened a deep internal spiritual awareness of a long awaited prophecy within the people as to the origins of mankind and their true purpose a small group of individuals have stumbled upon remnants of an ancient text containing the details of the communication forming the final links to an up and coming mysterious prophetic occurrence they are now on a dangerous mission to fulfill it s prophecy government officials and the military brass in this final race for control have invoked a global plan of dominance over the world to prevent the up and coming event and forever stop from being known the truth behind in the year 2035 homelessness in the united states had reached catastrophic proportions with the country overwhelmed by the crisis the president of the united states covertly planned that a secret homeless city would be built to take care of the exploding homeless situation the city was built and the homeless began being rounded up and taken there by force as the last phase of the city was being constructed a secret underground room from an old abandoned military base was unearthed the room was empty except for a shimmering mold that coated its cement walls the mold when exposed to the air blew in the wind and spread as the residents of the city came in contact with the mold they became sick some died but those who died did not stay dead they changed homeless city begins
