can a sports franchise blackmail a city into getting what it wants a new stadium say or favorable leasing terms by threatening to relocate in 1982 the owners of the chicago white sox pledged to keep the team in chicago if the city approved a 5 million tax exempt bond to finance construction of luxury suites at comiskey park the city council approved it a few years later when comiskey park was in need of renovation the owners threatened to move the team to florida unless a new stadium was built a site was chosen near the old stadium property condemned residents evicted and a new stadium built we had to make threats the owners said if we didn t have the threat of moving we wouldn t have gotten the deal sports is not a dominant industry in any city writes charles euchner yet it receives the kind of attention one might expect to be lavished on major producers and employers in playing the field euchner looks at why sports attracts this kind of attention and what that says about the urban political process examining the relationships between los angeles and the raiders baltimore and the colts and the orioles and chicago and the white sox euchner argues that in the absence of public standards for equitable arbitration between cities and teams the sports industry has the ability to steer negotiations in a way that leaves cities vulnerable according to euchner this greater leverage of sports franchises is due at least in part to their overall economic insignificance since the demands of a franchise do not directly affect many interest groups opponents of stadium projects have difficulty developing coalitions to oppose them the result is that civic leaders tend to succumb to the blackmail tactics of professional sports rather than developing and supporting sound economic policies
